Don't install hacked, cracked or pirated software. First, because doing so opens you up to a variety of problems, but also, because it exposes you to harmful and unfriendly computer viruses. It is also, definitely, not recommended that you do anything illegal. You're essentially hacking your own copy of Windows. A: These are not cracks, not modifications, and there is nothing illegal in this, as long as you're ok with the risks (eg. you're ok with installing a virus). I've done this in the past in a similar situation, but it was a piece of software that I had purchased, installed legally, and then it got accidentally deleted (I had a very important CAD design I had written, so I needed the program). What I did was to use Windows Password Reset to get a new product key and "unregister" the program for use again. Q: Is it possible to have a "status" column in a DataGridView that's tied to a property of an object? I'm currently binding a DataTable to a DataGridView control, and one of the columns is bound to a property of the row object in the datatable. Is it possible to have a "status" column that's tied to this property in the datatable? Something like this: This is currently how I'm binding the datatable, but I'd like the status column to be bound to the MyProperty property that's on the row.

You need to parse this file and search for "Product:ADT_2007_SceneEditor". MaKey MaKey (pic above), of course, is a little robot that lets you program and send simple commands to such familiar objects as your computer, lamps, light switches, and more.
