[A non-ST elevation acute coronary syndrome: mechanical complications of an arterial lesion]. Non-ST elevation acute coronary syndrome has several clinical implications, one of them being the diagnosis of an angina-like condition, with mechanical complications of an atherosclerotic lesion. To evaluate the frequency of this diagnosis and the related angiographic findings. We performed a retrospective review of 575 patients (404 men, 171 women), consecutively admitted with non-ST elevation acute coronary syndrome and coronary angiography performed. Patients were classified as symptomatic with or without stenosis. Angiograms were considered normal if no segment was changed from a normal to an abnormal pattern. Patients without angiographic lesions were classified as asymptomatic. The angiographic stenosis was evident in 63 patients (10.9%), including 31 (22.5%) with angina and 32 (20.4%) without angina. There were 70 patients (12.4%) with a normal angiogram, and in 39 (3.4%) the angiogram showed no coronary artery abnormalities. The diagnosis of angina-like syndrome was the correct one in 49 (7.1%) patients, with no statistical difference between patients with and without angiographic findings. The frequency of a significant coronary stenosis (more than 70%) was significantly higher in asymptomatic patients (9.4%) when compared to those with angina (4.9%; $p = 0.025$) and in symptomatic patients with angina (7.5%; $p = 0.047$) when compared to those with angina without detectable stenosis. In our experience, a significant coronary stenosis is a frequent finding in patients with non-ST elevation acute coronary syndrome, particularly in those with angina. Angiographic findings were more frequent in asymptomatic patients, but the diagnosis was correct in a large proportion of both groups. Angiographic findings also have a higher incidence of a significant coronary stenosis in patients with angina. February 21, 2019

Fabrication of light emitting diodes (LED) is typically accomplished by forming a plurality of LED and connecting the LED by a conductive device, such as solder, conductive epoxy, or conductive adhesive, to an encapsulation material. For example, one or more LED may be connected to a lead frame by a conductive device and the lead frame encapsulated. A sheet of encapsulation material is placed around the die and conductive device and the outer periphery of the encapsulant is trimmed off to expose the die and conductive device. The LED is connected to the lead frame by placing the die and conductive device within a first encapsulant, which is placed over the die and conductive device, and trimming the encapsulant to expose the die and conductive device. A second encapsulant is placed over the die and conductive device and the first encapsulant and the conductive device are pressed and heated to seal the encapsulant. Many semiconductor devices, including many LED devices, have been lead based devices. However, lead based devices have many disadvantages including being difficult to encapsulate with a thermoplastic encapsulant and being difficult to solder. In order to overcome the disadvantages associated with lead based devices, lead free devices

P.The present disclosure relates to a semiconductor structure, and particularly to a fin-like field effect transistor formed on a silicon-on-insulator (SOI) substrate. Fin-like field effect transistors (FinFET) can be used for ultra-high density integrated circuits. FinFETs are particularly attractive for 16 nm and beyond minimum feature sizes, where a smaller silicon footprint can be achieved by forming vertical fins. FinFETs also provide better electrostatic control over the channel and increased current carrying capability of the device. In FinFETs, the gate structure wraps around three sides of the channel. The gate structure can be electrically isolated from the channel by a physical gate dielectric layer (e.g., an oxide layer) positioned between the channel and the gate electrode.Canterbury Airways Canterbury Airways Limited was the former company operating the route between Christchurch and the United States. History In 1995, a NZ$55 million venture was created to operate The Christchurch to San Diego route. The first flight was from July 1996. By the late 2000s the airline was losing money and had to borrow NZ$83 million to keep the service running. In mid-2008, the government sold Canterbury Airways to OzLink and the airline ceased operating. In 2011, a review of the sale of the company was launched. Aircraft From their Christchurch base, Canterbury Airways operated a Douglas DC-3, and by 2003 a Beechcraft B1900GT. For cargo reasons, the aircraft were operated by OzLink and Pacific Wing Air Services.
