CONTENT RATING: Everyone (16 and up) RELEASE DATE: December 12, 2012 GENRE: Puzzle/Action Climb Challenge, is a third person perspective game where the player must navigate through three challenging levels by jumping between various sized stationary and moving platforms. Each level has a unique design and play style challenging the player's observation skills, puzzle solving skills, speed and most of all their determination to complete the game. This game is designed to be difficult, however, achievable enough to convince the player to keep trying. Giving the player a real sense of achievement upon completion. It is highly likely you will not complete this game on your first few sittings. Which will require you to master the first two levels and will result in you being better prepared for the final level. Remember, if you find yourself becoming frustrated it may be better for your progress to take a break and try again later. Warning This game contains flashing lights that may make it unsuitable for people with photosensitive epilepsy or other photosensitive conditions. Player discretion is advised. User reviews 2/23/2017 +10 very good and good game, good graphical design, could be polished if the game could be updated to android. Otherwise get's a 7/10 would recommend. Andorada is a great game, but it could be a lot better. The graphics are not too bad and the control is excellent. But besides that, the game doesn't do what it says on the box. It is very hard, almost impossible to beat some of the levels, and all you get for it is a gold star. Same goes for level editing which might be interesting, but it doesn't really make anything easier. And the whole stage editor doesn't really give you much freedom either. There are a few things you can do, but the most important thing is missing: No way to save or load your own levels and edit them. All levels are stored on the hard disk, but it is locked. Which makes it impossible to save your own level or test your own level to see if it is working right. Maybe you know, but I find it really bad that you can't save any of your own levels. So while the game has a lot of potential, but it falls short of it on many levels. Would probably be better as a single level game with more "in your face" challenges. And it could be even better
