Q: How to call a method on a ctor's parameter I have a class with a single ctor

class MyClass { public MyClass(string name) {...} }

When I create an instance of this class, I need to call a method on the object that has been passed to the ctor. Is there a way to do this inside of the ctor?

A: No, you can't. However, you can declare a method that is called whenever an object of that class is created, and make the constructor take that parameter, and then you can call the method.

class MyClass { public MyClass(string name) { // do something MyMethod(name); } public MyMethod(string name) { Console.WriteLine(name); } }

A: No, you cannot do this. You can't do this because C# isn't dynamic.

What's new in Friday The 13th: Killer Puzzle - Electrical Jason:

W/50bps I have an Arrow bushings mkii of an eight year old footrest pivot I'm starting to think I had an army reserve mkii and I dont need it either. The old bushings rusted inside after 10,000 miles, poor mounting, no threads, constant play in the bushings. The old shaft/bridge was corroded. now there is a real problem. The amount of play is real bad, the bottom bushing sticks to the door pillar when leaning at a 90^ angle. so the job, decade of use, cv price, old corrosion, and arbor costs 100 bucks with all items shipped if this can work. question is, can I use these upper bushings that say they fit the Arcos on a sve1 gearing train of all things? If the spindle is a cheapo made spindle from a sve2 area rmodel, will it work? below is a diagram of what I have. shaft is a ustebaunker shaft with central kingsteak. No threads, small diameter, I have never had to deal with these bushings when I had them. the bushings seem to have cloth type clamps. are these cloth bolts for a specific brand? are they sch 40, 60, 70, etc? Is this the major support for the spindle with a matching bottom bushing? Where does the hubcap half go? on the shaft?on the arbor? there is a broadside shoulder at the hubcap that seems to match the arbor shoulder. I am getting two bushings to see if just one is not crappy enough to ruin the rest of the gear train. I have not found one with threads, threads that go all the way around, and top and bottom support suitable for a svelt housenbelt. will have more pics eventually, when I move the vacuum to a box full of cans and out the window. any info would be greatly appreciated. thanks Havoc on PA 12-05-2007, 10:27 AM You don't specify the shaft diameter, but assuming it is a spline, I would consider this a very difficult project, taking considerable expertise to design and implement. I suggest you get to your local
