the warrens made the house their home for 3 days while they investigated, but they didnt actually find anything. they got spooked by one of the caretaker kids and left the house because they felt like they were in danger. in the end, they returned to the kastner house the next day to keep it as a resort property. but things didnt go so well for them there. when the warrens had their troubles there, they claimed the house is haunted. by this time, however, the kastners had a new set of caretakers, and they werent that interested in the warrens at all. so ed and lorraine decided to let the house go. the williamses built a new house on the property. they werent the kastners, and they werent the warrens, but they had everything they needed to have a decent life. theres no way that ed and lorraine warren could have had all of that. the warrens werent just involved in the amityville horror murders; they were also there when the lutz family was murdered in 1964. that incident didnt even happen in amityville though, since the kastner house was a different location from the lutz house. no matter how we cut it, the court case, the warrens role in it, and the arne warren murder are more real than this nonsense.

it also doesn't help that the conjuring 3 has plenty of plot holes, and it's a very flat movie that leaves you wishing there was a little more character development. ed warren is barely in the film, and lorraine warrens role is limited to asking the main characters to find a killer. the film also glosses over the fact that the warrens never went to the real house (as far as we know), and the only named location is the dog kennel. and the central tenants of the warrens supernatural work are completely absent.

in the 1980s, the warrens were profiled in the book the new investigators by gerald carpenter. carpenter included claims from both sides of the warrens story, from those who were skeptical of their claims, as well as from their supporters. the warrens are sometimes referred to as the houdinis of the paranormal world. in the book the haunted, by brandon stroud, a more recent in depth look into the warrens, stroud states that the warrens were more than just teachers, and he also calls them frauds. the warrens the haunted book includes quotes from the warrens themselves which have been reproduced in the film. in one, lorraine warren says, we were tempted to use the old college try saying, but we decided to try a little harder. in the haunted book, stroud also states that the warrens had to convince themselves and others that they did not get to be rich by taking advantage of the gullible public. this was despite the fact that they had success and money as a result of their real estate career. they claimed that, the warrens arent the only case where theres a lot of money to be made on the paranormal; theres also the michael jackson, elvis presley, and the green bay packers cases. though, in all three of these cases, the claims turned out to be true. the warrens are also often credited with originating the phrase, i think, im not really sure i believe in the paranormal. it came from one of the first paranormal shows they did in 1984 when they were featured on the a&e paranormal show, paranormal state. though, the phrase itself is much older, and in fact, it is thought to have originated in the early 20th century. the phrase has changed and evolved over time. in the early 1900s, it was more commonly used to describe the possible existence of ghosts, as in i dont think that im not really sure if im not really sure im not really sure if im not really sure im not really sure im not really sure im not really sure im not really
